Raborn Returns to Industry

Raborn

William F. Raborn Jr., retired Navy admiral who recently left the Central Intelligence Agency after 14 months as director, has returned to the Aerojet-General Corp. as vice president-general representative. He will counsel the firm out of a Washington office on ways to meet national defense, space and scientific needs, according to R. I. McKenzie, president. Raborn served with Aerojet for about two years before his CIA appointment. Before that, he had headed the Navy's Polaris ballistic missile program.
